Vrn. 21.Townset Townset is a village and former civil parish, now in the parish of Flixton, in the Boston Borough, Lincolnshire, England. The population of the civil parish at the 2011 census was 5,487. Geography The village is south-east from the centre of Boston, and north-west from Stamford. The River Nene forms the north side of the village, and the North Fen Drain forms the western side. The top of a hamlet of that name lies 1.8 miles to the south-west. The vicarage was built in 1804 by John Love, a local architect. History There are signs of human habitation in the village, including earthworks from the Anglo-Saxon period. The village was included in the hundred of Boston. Parish registers date from 1538 and the church was built in 1838; the nave and chancel are in the Romanesque style, and the tower is in the Decorated style. A memorial window in the church commemorates the victims of the Russian Revolution of 1905. Townset Hall was built in 1837, and is now the town hall for the Boston Borough Council and has other functions. The South Street was built in the 1850s. The village was a centre for the quarrying and dressing of limestone and the distribution of the geologically unstable material in adjacent fens. The Stone Pits, which had operated from 1825, were active until the 1920s, producing up to a million tons of stones a year. The pits are 3e33713323
